MILLINERY

The new Autumn Hats show a tendency towards large shapes.

The question of the moment isn't it. The color, shape and material of your fall hat, uncommonly smart looking with the correct, refining touch, almost all are individual, and range all the way from a small hat one wears with a suit, to the broader brimmed creations seen on dress occasions.

Children's and Misses' Hats in Felt, Velvet, Silk, and Velour, with corded bands and streamers.

New individual Veils and Veiling.

ADOLPHUSTOWN

The usual quiet of the Old Bay Bay church was broken by large crowds on Sunday and Monday, September 3rd and 4th. On Sunday an interesting preaching service was conducted by Rev. S. A. Sherry, Milton. The success of the Monday gathering was largely due to the kindness of three baseball teams, Kingston and Napanee Fashion Granites and the home team. The Live Wires and the Adolphustown teams played a very close game in the morning, the latter winning by one. Immediately after dinner Mr. Smith, P.S.I. for Prince Edward county, gave an interesting address on the U. E. Loyalists and their early struggles. At three o'clock the large crowd moved to the ball field and another lively game ensued. The local team was again victorious, the score standing 12 to 10 in favor of the lunch counter and booth, conducted by the Adolphustown Ladies' Aid, were well patronized. BRIDGING A GULLY

By J. E. MIDDLETON

Where the Chippawa-Queenston power canal route led through solid rock the difficulties of construction had to do mainly with the rapid removal of blasted material from a hole as much as forty feet deep. The great electric shovels with an arm-reach of 73 feet helped to solve that problem. But there was one section near the whirlpool where the canal had to be carried across a gully. Bowman's ravine is a deep cleft in the rock which revealed a deposit of quicksand at the bottom before bed-rock was reached. The task of bridging this "V" was no common undertaking. It was achieved by filling in the whole gully with broken rock excavated from the other portions of the canal and allowing these thousands upon thousands of tons, months of time in which to settle to rock foundation. The "fill" was not a mere dump. The bottom was the widest section, and the sides of the fill made an angle of about 60 degrees with the base. If you draw an equilateral triangle and cut it in two transversely, the lower section will be the shape of the "fill" when it was finally settled. Then the excavating shovels got busy and made a channel with sloping sides which ultimately were lined with re-inforced concrete. This whirlpool section of the canal is 2,500 feet long and is one of the engineering features of the work.

The main rock section which is over eight miles long, is forty-eight feet wide, with perpendicular sides ranging from forty to eighty-five feet in depth. At Lundy's Lane the bottom of the canal is 145 feet below the original ground-level. The amount of rock excavated made a total of 4,182,000 cubic yards. The bottom and sides of the canal through all this distance are concreted, and by reason of this smooth lining the capacity of the canal has been increased by over 20 per cent. The elimination of friction justified this novel treatment.

For the earth section of four miles 13,200,000 cubic yards of material were excavated. In every respect the work was colossal. It was carried on at a time when efficient labor was difficult to secure, and yet from the day the big shovels began to operate until the first generator at Queenston began to hum, only three years and nine months elapsed. The construction of the canal alone, without reference to the great power house, is one of the notable engineering accomplishments of this continent. It is the work of Canadian engineers and is for the direct benefit of all the people within transmission range of Niagara Falls.

Mr. Geo. E. McIntosh, who has been acting Fruit Commissioner since the resignation of Mr. C. W. Baxter, has been appointed Fruit Commissioner of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa. Following several years of journalism, Mr. McIntosh, on behalf of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, conducted an investigation of the conditions surrounding the marketing of fruit, as well as the transportation of fruit, both within and without the province. He was engaged in this work from 1911 up to 1917, when he was appointed Transportation Specialist in the Federal Fruit Branch, which position he has been holding up to the taking over of the present position. As Transportation Specialist, Mr. McIntosh has become intimately acquainted with fruit and vegetable growers, shippers, and carriers in all parts of Canada, and has become thoroughly familiar with the marketing problems of the different provinces and districts.

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

The Federal Government's attempt to forestall a renewal of the unemployment crisis of recent winters, which has taken the form of a round-table conference between representatives of Federal and Provincial Governments and also municipalities throughout the Dominion seems likely to have a very good effect. Representatives of every province of the Dominion, except Prince Edward Island, presented their views as to the unemployment problem and the outlook for the coming winter. Generally there was a distinct feeling of optimism as to the outlook. At the present time, in nearly every province, employment conditions were declared to be normal, or nearly so, with a prospect of considerable less unemployment during the coming winter than in the last two years.

The Federal Government's attitude, placed before the conference by Rt. Hon. MacKenzie King, who welcomed the delegates, and later by Hon. James Murdock, was in effect that the time had arrived for a renewed development of self-reliance and self-help on the part of both individuals and provincial and municipal bodies throughout the Dominion. During the war, Canadians had drifted into a system of centralization which had meant that the Federal Government had taken control of many matters which properly did not belong within Federal jurisdiction. This had been evident in fuel control, and the formation of Boards to handle and direct the marketing of wheat and other steps, which, in previous years, would never have been thought to be within the Federal category.

This centralization would be departed from, the Prime Minister declared. There were certain burdens which should be borne by the provinces and the municipalities and as far as possible it was now time to develop a spirit of self-reliance among the different bodies and individuals throughout the country and get away from centralization. Too much government was not of benefit to the country, Mr. King declared and he asked that the conference consider carefully where a line should be drawn between matters which were properly Federal and those which were Provincial in their scope and application.

In its Order-in-Council the Federal Government had gone as far as it possibly would towards acceptance of responsibility for unemployment relief. There must be a line of demarkation which would undoubtedly be laid down by the conference before its sessions concluded. Neither Mr. King nor Mr. Murdock favored the continuance of the system of doles, or cash grants which previously had been provided. Palliative measures were not sufficient and the desire was to find remedies which could be applied in all cases and without the danger of giving rise to a feeling of dependency on the government for things which should be provided by the individual for himself.

Representatives from outside of the Federal Government were also against continuing the giving of doles except for the actual relief of emergencies. Gradually the delegates favored provision of work and avoidance of any taint charity in relieving the workless.

"God help those who help themselves," declared the Minister of Labor in his opening speech and he added that among some Canadians there was too much of a tendency to avoid self-help and depend on Governments and other authorities to take care of them. Mr. Murdock also expressed himself against continuing the giving of doles to unemployed men. Such a system could only add to the likihood of unemployment, while to provide men with work when they needed it, would assist these men in getting on their feet.

The problem of unemployed returned soldiers was divided from that of other unemployed men, it was pointed out. In the case of returned men who had come home physically unfit to resume their former work, these men were being cared for or had been cared for by the Government. These men were in a different position and were entitled to care in any emergency.

Many of the Provinces, and also of the municipal and other bodies present, entertained strong views in regard to unemployment relief and steps which should be taken to carry this out and allocate the cost. Some of the municipalities argued that the provinces or federal government should shoulder this burden entirely, but their proposal found little support. The result of the full discussion is expected to be an outlining of steps to be taken in co-operation between Federal and Provincial authorities.

Hon. Chas. Stewart's announcement on immigration and development of the western natural resources made following his tour of the prairie provinces, is interesting and timely.

"Immigration and development of our natural resources are essential to the progress of Canada and the solution of many national problems" said Mr. Stewart, in discussing his recent western tour.

Capital is requisite for development, especially in Western Canada where the great natural resources furnish a great field for intelligence. The Government is prepared to encourage investment for developement but not for exploitation and stock-mongering. Every year Canada sends out of the country $40,000,000 for petroleum and petroleum products. Alberta may in the near future furnish a home product that may check in some degree this drain on our capital. The steady development of the United States oil field north has brought producing wells to the international boundary and it is confidently anticipated that discoveries will be made this side of the line that will bring activity and prosperity to our western territory. The same is true of other natural resources of the west.

The government is prepared to protect and encourage legitimate efforts in developement, and equally prepared to discourage stock-jobbing promoters. Lease conditions will be carried out to the letter by the government and investors need fear retroactive legislation imposing unexpected conditions or exactions. Successful development will repay the government under present conditions and in the prosperity that follows in its wake.

At the departure of Hon. Mr. Stewart is the participation by the government in the results of development on purely governmental lands in Southern Alberta. The famous Palowski Bird Sanctuary comprises forty-four square miles immediately north of the Montana oil fields. It has been leased to an American syndicate, who are developing this property. Under the terms of the lease the company holds three sections and in event of discovery has the right to fifty per cent. of the whole sanctury, the remainder with its enhanced value remaining with the government. The company pays all expenditures in development and is spending large sums in its exploration. This is the first instance in which the government has become a prospective beneficiary beyond the customary rentals and royalties.

Shoals and Falls are Mysterious

Much puzzlement has been caused by mysterious shoals off the mouth of the Mississippi river. The remarkable thing about them is that they are not permanent; they come and they go. Inasmuch as the water all over the area in question is normally from 1,200 to 1,800 feet deep, how can there be any shoals?

Little attention would have been paid to the matter save for the fact that reports on the subject sent in by ship masters have been persistent and descriptively circumstantial One letter, for instance, notes a series of soundings on a course laid by compass from an anchored lightship, the leadline recording 13 fathoms, 22 fathoms, and even 17 fathoms.

The Mississippi at New Orleans and for a long distance below that city is narrow and deep. Then, before reaching the Gulf, it branches out into what are called the "passes," two of which are navigable by the largest ships. Outside, in the Gulf, beyond the mouths of the passes, the water is of great depth. No shoals are known.

Yet week after week reports from ship captains to the above-mentioned effect have been coming in. Investigation seemed to be called for, and the U. S. Coast Survey sent out a vessel for the purpose. Many lines of soundings were run back and forth over the area where the shoals were alleged to be located, and these were supplemented by the use of a "submarine sentry." The latter is a kite-shaped contrivance which stays at a uniform depth while dragged through the water. It is nits anything, a trigger is sprung and the thing upsets, comes to the surface and rings a bell.

The exploration by the surveying vessel revealed no shoals; so the whole affair remains a mystery. To explain it, somebody has suggested gas!

Off the Atlantic coast of Central America "gas islands" (as they are called) occasionally appear. Often of considerable size, they rise above the surface of the sea, soon afterward explode, and vanish. It is supposed that they are produced by gigantic bubbles of natural gas which force up small areas of the sea-bottom.

There is no question of the good faith of the shipmasters who have reported shoals off the mouth of the Mississippi, and to attribute their detailed observations to imagination seems altogether unreasonable. On the other hand, the shoals were certainly not there when the Coast Survey vessel went to look for them. Is it conceivable that they were temporary elevations of sea bottom caused by gas?

In Pensacola Bay, off Fair Point, and opposite the naval air station, a curious natural phenomenon has been many times observed. As described in a recent letter received from Lieut. V. R. Dunlap, once or twice in every year a mud island rises out of the deep water, and after several weeks sinks. The exposed top of it is about forty feet long, and the clay of which it is composed is too soft to support the weight of a man. There is no evidence of liberation of gas, and no oily particles are observed on the water. The clay has no odor. Pile-driving for a marine railroad, thirty years ago, disclosed the fact that the fine white sand of the bottom is underlaid by soft clay; but what is the agency that forces it up and creates the temporary island?

Islands, in some instances, are a very uncertain kind of real estate. Twelve years ago an island off Salvador, in the Bopanco lagoon (Central America), suddenly began to sink. Boats carried off a good many of the inhabitants, but there were not enough for all, and 170 men, women and children were drowned when this patch of what had been supposed to be terra firma slid into the depths. The catastrophe occurred in the night, and in the morning there was no sign of the island.

Oceanic islands have a way of popping up and down now and then. Not many years ago a brand-new one made its appearance near the volcano group in the Pacific, amid a tumult of the sea and great clouds of ashes and steam. When the disturbance had subsided, it proved to be nearly three miles in circumference, and the highest part of it was 480 feet above the waves. The Japanese landed on it when it was cool enough, raised their flag upon it, and called it Nii Shima. Whereupon it proceeded to melt like sugar in a tea-cup, and at last accounts it was only a few feet above sea level.

Old Quarries.

South of the city of Paris the country is honeycombed with abandoned quarries, some of which are of enormous extent, resembling the shafts of great mines, from 300 yards to half a mile in length, and lying from thirty to fifty feet beneath the surface of the ground. In these old quarries are grown nearly all the mushrooms consumed in the French capital. The mushrooms flourish in these caverns at all seasons and they have, in Paris, the reputation of being superior in flavor to those grown elsewhere. The worst enemy of the mushroom growers is a species of fly that swarms through the dark passages in such numbers as some times to extinguish the candles of the workmen. The larvae of this fly destroy the beds before the shoots have emerged from the ground.

Hair Industry.

Antwerp, Belgium, is the center of the human hair industry. Raw hair and Chinese hair, which has been bleached, dyed and prepared, is used in the manufacture of women's hair nets.

THE FIRST WHITE MEN

UNIQUE MEMORIAL ON SHORES OF LAKE ERIE.

Cross Was Dedicated on July 5th Near Port Dover to the French Explorers Who Spent the Winter at That Spot More Than Three Centuries Ago.

An obscure, but splendid chronicle of Canadian history was brought to the light of public attention on July 5, when a memorial monument was dedicated at Port Dover to the memory of nine gallant Frenchmen, who, in the course of their exploration of the north shore of Lake Erie, spent the winter of 1669-70 there, marking the advent of white men to that part of Ontario.

With that apathy typical of a young people toward history, Canadians have permitted this stirring narrative, written by one of the priests who headed the expedition and published in 1903 in the translation of Dr. James Coyne, of St. Thomas, to remain almost unnoticed among the records of the Ontario Historical Society. Finally in 1901 Dr. Coyne examined the original manuscript as it came from the pen of the narrator, Brehant de Galinee. The document is in the archives of the Bibliotheque Nationale, Paris.

Norfolk County, Ontario, has been the object of many glowing tributes, but none have been more sincere than that of the scholarly Frenchman who lived from October 17, 1669, to March 23, 1670, in the meadowlands of the Lynn valley. He wrote:

"I leave you to imagine whether we suffered in the midst of this abundance in the earthly Paradise of Canada; I call it so because there is assuredly no more beautiful region in all Canada. The woods are open, interspersed with beautiful meadows, watered by rivers and rivulets filled with fish and beaver, and an abundance of fruits, and what is more important, so full of game that we saw there at one time more than a hundred roebucks in a single band, herds of fifty or sixty hinds and bears fatter and of better flavor than the most savory pigs of France."

The expedition, the account of which occupies M. de Galinee's narrative, was promoted jointly by the officials of church and state. King Louis XIV's dominions, and the mission field of the church were to be expanded by united action. The enterprise brought together not only two distinguished priests who first circumnavigated that part of Ontario south of the Nipissing portage route, but celebrated explorers, La Salle and Joliet. Dollier de Casson, who is referred to in the account in the third person (though he seems to have been the spiritual leader of the group) was thirty-three years of age, and before entering the church he had distinguished himself as a cavalry officer in Old France. Of noble birth and courtly manners, he seems to have been a man of inborn leadership and superior intellectual ability. The raconteur, rene de Brehant de Galinee, was also of noble lineage. He had received a mathematical training. Both were of the Sulpitian order.

Starting from Montreal in July they made their way up the St. Lawrence, and coasted along the south shore of Lake Ontario to Burlington Bay. From here the expedition proceeded overland to the Grand river where they parted company with La Salle. The priests, with seven men and three canoes, went down the river. Lake Erie seemed to them like a great sea. They were impressed by the size of the billows which the chronicler naively accounts for as a result of the great depth of the lake.

"We could not pass the winter on the lake shore because of the high winds by which we should have been buffeted. For this reason we chose a beautiful spot on the bank of a rivulet about a quarter of a league in the woods, where we camped."

The site of this camp can still be identified. It is on the right bank of Black Creek, just above the forks where the creek joins the Lynn river. Elevations indicating the outline of the building and trenches for drainage are quite distinct.

Being Frenchmen, these voyageurs loved their wine, and from the narrative it would seem that quantities of grapes were available:

"I will say to you by the way," writes M. Galinee, "that the vine grows here only in sand, but although it has no cultivation, it does not fail to produce grapes in great quantities as large and as sweet as the finest of France. We even made wine of them with which M. Dollier said Holy Mass all winter and it was as good as vin de Grave. It is a heavy dark wine like the latter. Only red grapes are seen here but in so large quantities that we found ourselves that we could easily have made 25 or 30 hogsheads of wine."

There is no complaint of the winter being long or tedious. These gentlemen kept themselves busy with preparations for the spring, and found comfort in their religious devotions. They lived only for the spring when they could again resume their push to the westward, which they hoped to establish a mission in Ohio.

At last the spring came:

"On the 23rd of March, Passion Sunday, we all went to the lake shore to make and plant a cross in memory of so long a sojourn of Frenchmen as ours had been. We offered our prayers there, and seeing that where we were was almost clear of ice, we resolved to set out on the 26th of March, the day after Annunciation."

On July 5 the Canadian National Sites and Monuments Board, the Norfolk Historical Society, and the Ontario Historical Society united in the dedication of a cross which was erected on Bront Hill in memory of the Dollier-Galinee expedition.

Precautionary Investigation.

With a sentimental leaning towards the days of his own youth, a certain business man sent his son to the college where he had himself been educated. On arriving at the place of much knowledge the young man began to make a few inquiries. "I should like to see my father's record," said he to the head of the college. "He was here in 1890. "I shall be very pleased to show you the record," was the reply. "But have you any special reason for consulting it?" "Well," replied the youth frankly, "when I left home dad told me not to disgrace his record, and I only want to see how far I can go."

Working Out the Average.

Dennis had toiled hard and well for some years, and his master thought that it was time the faithful servant was given a rise in wages. "Dennis," said the master, "your wages are now fivepence an hour, are they not?" "Yes, sorr." "Well, I intend to raise them to sixpence an hour in the future." "Stop a minute, sorr!" exclaimed Dennis. "If I lose two hours will I lose a shilling?" "Why, certainly," said the master. "Well, thin," said Dennis, "I don't want your rise. I only lose tinpence now."

The Eskimos.

The Bureau of Education for the natives of Alaska points out that in a single generation the reindeer industry has raised the Eskimos one entire stage in the scale of civilization. From primitive, nomadic hunters they have become a civilized, pastoral people, living in villages and having in their herds a means of support and the opportunity to accumulate wealth.

Absent-mindedness.

The bishop was very tired. There were an unprecedented number of candidates for confirmation, and the church grew hotter and hotter. The bishop could feel his eyes getting heavy. At last, when he was nearing the end of his labors, a bald-headed man knelt down in front of him. The bishop, suppressing a yawn, put both his hands on the shining head, and nauttered, "I declare this stone to be well and truly laid."

DOCTORS AS DETECTIVES.

On the Track of Mankind's Greatest Enemies.

While Scotland Yard devotes its energies to the detection and capture of criminals of all classes, there is an army of detectives — a medical C. I. D.—almost continually on the trail of murderers with whom the police are seldom concerned.

One of these murderers is the bacteria of influenza, an assassin whose criminal record is more formidable than that of Scotland Yard's enemies put together. His victims in one outrage alone totalled no fewer than ten millions. Yet this deadly menace to the human race was allowed to go comparatively free until the Medical C. I. D.—the Medical Research Council—finally got on his track.

Little was known about the murderer beyond the fact that he appeared in the guise of a mild winter cold and then suddenly ran riot, claiming his victims in battalions.

Dr. W. W. C. Topley decided upon a clever ruse to discover his methods. He produced an epidemic upon a small scale. The victims were a population of mice, which were suddenly struck down by the disease.

The result of this strange piece of detective work have already established some vitally interesting facts. It was found that an epidemic among a population which is increasing at a constant rate always progresses in a series of waves. Certain individuals most likely to fall victims to the disease escape infection even when they are among an infected population. Their immunity depends on the stage of the epidemic has reached when they are first exposed to the risk of infection. Further, strangely enough, an infected population will recover from the disease more quickly if it remains isolated than if other individuals are allowed access to it. This means that the more "fresh" victims there are the greater danger there is of the population already infected succumbing to the disease.

If a method is discovered of controlling an epidemic, it will be put to the test in the case of epidemics occurring among live stock.

There is another detective story of this C. I. D. which concerns a murderer called tuberculosis. This assassin killed thousands of persons in Great Britain last year. In some places his victims were so numerous that it became clear that he must find in these places special helps to his operations.

What were these helps? The detectives set to work and found that dust was the greatest ally of the bacilli. Rock mines, grinding yards, printing houses, and places where there is much dust are, it was found, spheres where tuberculosis found most victims.

The medical detectives gathered the dust from such places, examined it just as Sherlock Holmes examined the dust from his visitors' boots, and found that if it gets into lungs it inflames them, not so much by its irritant action, as by its action as a chemical poison.

At this stage one of the detectives, Dr. Gye, thought, of making use of animals in another experiment. He took an animal normally difficult to infect with tubercule, and injected into it a little tubercule plus a little dust. The result was that general tuberculosis attacked the animal.

This latter discovery is an amazing one, for it proves that without the aid of dust the bacilli would in certain cases be harmless. The discovery means also that the ravages of the disease may be greatly restricted by the elimination of dust, an easy enough task when it is remembered what a large number of industries there are which could substitute empty wheels for sandstones.

Thus this medical C. I. D. may help us to get rid of two of mankind's greatest enemies, whose ravages not all the brains of the world could hitherto check.

Unconscious Truth.

An excited orator stood on a soapbox at the corner of the street. A huge crowd surged around him. But he was dissatisfied. He tried hard to be heard, but it was all in vain. Every attempt he made to speak was interrupted by some member of the audience. At last, stamping his foot in great anger, he bellowed at the top of his voice: "Every time I open my mouth a nonentity speaks." And the crowd agreed.

Water-Power In Canada.

The available recorded water-power in Canada exceeds 32,000,000 h.p., and the present turbine installation is about 2,500,000 h.p. Present development represents an annual equivalent of 18,500,000 tons of coal, which in fifteen years may run up to 40,000,000 tons of coal annually.

WOMAN COULD NOT WORK

Made Strong and Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

St. Paul, Minn.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a tired, worn-out feeling and painful periods. I used to get up with a pain in my head and pains in my lower parts and back. Often I was not able to do my work. I read in your little book about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I have taken it. I feel so well and strong and can do every bit of my work and not a pain in my back now. I recommend your medicine and you can use this letter as a testimonial." — Mrs. Paul Mabes, 801 Winslow St., St. Paul, Minn.

Just another case where a woman found relief by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Many times these tired, worn-out feelings and pains about the body are from troubles only women have. The Vegetable Compound is especially adapted for just this condition. The good results are noted by the disagreeable symptoms passing away—one after another.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a Woman's Medicine for Women's Ailments. Always reliable.

Issued in 1917 and Maturing 1st December, 1922.

CONVERSION PROPOSALS

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE offers to holders of these bonds who desire to continue their investment in Dominion of Canada securities the privilege of exchanging the maturing bonds for new bonds bearing 5½ per cent interest, payable half yearly, of either of the following classes:—

(b) Ten year bonds, dated 1st November, 1922, to mature 1st November, 1932.

While the maturing bonds will carry interest to 1st December, 1922, the new bonds will commence to earn interest from 1st November, 1922, GIVING A BONUS OF A FULL MONTH'S INTEREST TO THOSE AVAILING THEMSELVES OF THE CONVERSION PRIVILEGE.

This offer is made to holders of the maturing bonds and is not open to other investors. The bonds to be issued under this proposal will be substantially of the same character as those which are maturing, except that the exemption from taxation does not apply to the new issue.

Dated at Ottawa, 8th August, 1922.

Holders of the maturing bonds who wish to avail themselves of this conversion privilege should take their bonds AS EARLY AS POSSIBLE, BUT NOT LATER THAN SEPTEMBER 30th, to a Branch of any Chartered Bank in Canada and receive in exchange an official receipt for the bonds surrendered, containing an undertaking to deliver the corresponding bonds of the new issue.

Holders of maturing fully registered bonds, interest payable by cheque from Ottawa, will receive their December 1 interest cheque as usual. Holders of coupon bonds will detach and retain the last unmatured coupon before surrendering the bond itself for conversion purposes.

The surrendered bonds will be forwarded by banks to the Minister of Finance at Ottawa, where they will be exchanged for bonds of the new issue, in fully registered, or coupon registered or coupon bearer form carrying interest payable 1st May and 1st November of each year of the duration of the loan, the first interest payment accruing and payable 1st May, 1923. Bonds of the new issue will be sent to the banks for delivery immediately after the receipt of the surrendered bonds.

The bonds of the maturing issue which are not converted under this proposal will be paid off in cash on the 1st December, 1922.

Denbigh Lady Injured.

Mrs. Wilson, of Denbigh, was the victim of a very unfortunate accident last evening while milking one of the cows belonging to the farm where she resides. Mrs. Wilson had gone out as usual to milk this cow, but while she was milking it the cow turned and knocked Mrs. Wilson over. She was badly injured and arrangements were made to take her to the Hotel Dieu Hospital Kingston, where an X-ray was taken and it was found that her right hip was badly fractured. Mrs. Wilson had been on the road since twelve o'clock Sunday night, and this added greatly to her pain.

Let us demonstrate the superior qualities of the Canadian-made "Blue Bird" Electric Clothes Washer and Wringer, at attractive price quotations.

Fire Prevention Day.

By Royal Proclamation, His Excellency the Governor General of Canada has designated October 9th as Fire Prevention Day. During the week preceeding, lessons on fire prevention subjects will be given in every public school, public meetings will be held in many of the larger cities, towns and villages, and the owners and occupants of property everywhere throughout Canada will be counselled to give special attention to the removal of fire hazards from their premises. Fire waste is one of the most serious economic problems confronting Canada at the present time. The public in general is vitally effected by the tremendous losses annually incurred by fire and the enormous expenditures rendered necessary to adequately protect life and property from its ravages. Seeing that at least eighty-five per cent. of all fires are caused by carelessness and can therefore be prevented, it is the obvious duty of municipal authorities, fire department officials, boards of trade, and other representative citizen bodies to bring the matter [illegible] attention of the people. In order that this may be effectively accamplished, this Department respectfully asks for your co-operation. Can we have it ?

Bolivia Withdraws.

GENEVA, Sept. 11. — Bolivia has notified the League Secretariat of her withdrawal from the Assembly. The Bolivian delegation has not been in attendance this year, but remained in Paris, although their credentials have been sent to Geneva.

Bolivia's real reason for action is supposed to be the same as that of Peru in refusing to seat its delegation in the third assembly, namely, the election of the Chilean, Augusin Edwards, as president.

ELECT NEW PRESIDENT

William Cosgrave Chosen to Head Irish Parliament.

He Was Opposed by Labor Representatives Who Objected to His Statement Regarding Civil War—Promises to Restore Order and Suppress Crime—Ulster Is Well Pleased.

DUBLIN, Sept. 11.—The Irish Parliament met here Saturday, organized and was urged by the leader of the Labor deputies, Tom Johnson, to make a statement on general issues awaited by the people.

He complained that the army conferences preceding the outbreak of the civil war had never been explained and the public was still ignorant why these conferences had failed—hope was he responsible.

He further criticized the die-hard utterances that have appeared in the Government publicity statements. "Let us face realities," he urged. "We know you are not going to be able to disarm all these people. If you realise that, then is there no way in which word can be uttered from Ministerial benches which will give some kind of hope to the country, word that something is than grinding into dust will satisfy you?"

William Cosgrave, who was then in nomination as President of the Parliament, listened impassively to Johnson, and to questions which other deputies fired at him concerning the conduct of the civil war, and the Government intentions.

Then informal tones he read a brief reply to the effect that he would assert the authority and supremacy of the Irish Parliament and support the rights of the people and would ask the Parliament for any power deemed essential to restore order, suppress crime and expedite reconstruction, reparation and a return to normal conditions."

Deputy Johnson then equally coldly and briefly announced that the Labor members found the Government statement unsatisfactory and that they proposed to vote against Cosgrave as President of the Parliament. He was elected, nevertheless, despite the opposition of 17 Labor members.

The other Ministers elected were: Kevin O'Higgins, Home Affairs; Desmond FitzGerald, former Minister of Publicity, now Foreign Affairs; Patrick Hogan, Agriculture; Ernest Blythe, Local Government; Joseph McGrath, Industry; Johnson, Labor; Prof. John McNeil, Education; temporary Minister of Finance to be Cosgrave; J. J. Walsh, Postmaster-General, and two others without portfolio, Deputy Finian Lynch and Deputy Eamon J. Duggan, former Minister of Home Affairs, and the only signatory to the treaty now in the Government. The Parliament adjourned until Monday.

Ulster Pleased.

BELFAST, Sept. 11. — Northern Cabinet circles are watching the meeting of the Parliament in Dublin with the keenest interest, and their attitude is expressed in this statement from a man in closest touch with the Ulster Government.

"I think the whole meeting was very encouraging and while the Northern people of Ulster, desire to see the country settle down. The new President's declaration of policy was satisfactory, as it indicated to the world the right lines to secure the peace which the whole country so much needs.

"It likely it can safely say that in no part of Ireland will President Cosgrave have more cordial wishes for success in the course he has mapped out than in Ulster, for success of that policy will make for better understanding between North and South.

"So far, the Southern Government have overcome their difficulties, which are fully appreciated in Ulster."

Best Crop In Six Years.

CALGARY, Alta., Sept. 11.—Alberta is harvesting this year the finest crop since 1915," declared Geo. Hill, Dominion statistician. Reports from all parts of the country indicate that the average grade will be high, there having been so far, no frost, and no extremes of dry or wet weather. It is reported from authoritative circles that, while 25 bushels to the acre will be common, yields of 30, 35 and even 40 bushels an acre will be numerous.

Threshing is now general in all parts of the province. Most of the cutting is already completed. There has been no acute shortage of labor reported from any section.

Highway Now Open.

BRANTFORD, Sept. 11. — The highway to Hamilton is now open, and motorists have been relieved of the discomfort of traveling over the detour, which has been in exceptionally bad shape for the past three or four weeks. The new pavement is in excellent condition, and is a distinct advantage to traffic on this highway. It is expected that there will be no more detours on this road for some time. The gravel surface between Burtch and Paris is being covered with a coat of tar, and when completed will be one of the finest roads in Ontario. The Provincial Government is also engaged in the highway from this city to Hamilton.

Find Skeleton of Youth.

LINDSAY, Ont., Sept. 11.—After a space of three years, the clothing, gun and several other personal articles carried on the day of his disappearance by Christopher Hulbig, a young man of some 20 years, were discovered by Reeve Crawford, on Friday afternoon on the rocks about 200 yards east of Bob Lake Narrows. The articles, etc., were identified as belonging to the young man, but only the skeleton remained. A jury was impaneled and then adjourned to await the decision of the crown attorney. The missing man left home on Sept. 29, 1919.

FIRE AT EXHIBITION.

New Record for Total Attendance a Big Fair at Toronto.

TORONTO, Sept. 11.—Fire of unknown origin, which broke out in the Railway Building, provided last day visitors to the Canadian National Exhibition with a thrill which was not on the program. Before the blaze was discovered it had worked from the stores department of the C. P. R. over to the Canadian National and Grand Trunk section of the building and was storming fiercely in the attic.

Chief Russell was on the grounds and he at once sent in a general alarm. Before the city fire wagons arrived the Exhibition brigade had the blaze under control. There were a number of people in the building at the time.

The fire caused great excitement among the crowds on the grounds and thousands of persons massed themselves around the building, but their behavior was quite orderly and the police had little difficulty in keeping them at a safe distance.

The damage done is estimated at $1,000.

Still another Canadian National Exhibiton goes down in history as a record breaker. This year's Exhibition again substantiated the boast, "the biggest annual permanent Fair in the world."

One million, three hundred and seventy-two thousand people paid to enjoy the attractions of Canada's great exhibition, which closed on Saturday night in a blaze of glory. This is 130,500 more than attended in 1921, the previous "biggest and best," with 1,242,000 patrons. This year's objective of 1,250,000, at first thought most ambitious, was exceeded by 122,500.

BAD AUTO CRASH.

Sir Young Joy-Riders Were Badly Injured.

MILTON, Ont., Sept. 11.—A serious automobile accident occurred near Milton about midnight, in which one of the victims may die. Six young men from Acton started on a joy ride with the intention of making a circuit from Acton to Campbellville to Milton and home again. On their way from Campbellville they failed to make a turn opposite A. Anderson's farm on the Nassagoweya and Esquesing town line, while going at a fair rate of speed and crashed into a telephone pole.

All the occupants of the car were injured, Cameron Johnston seriously, having his leg broken and sustaining internal injuries. He was also cut about the head. Dr. McCall, of Milton, was summoned to the scene of the accident, and after dressing the wounds of the injured, ordered Johnston to be removed to Guelph Hospital at one, as it was feared his injuries would prove fatal.

The other five members of the party, two of whom were very badly injured, were taken to their homes at Acton, where they are now under the doctor's care. The car was completely wrecked.

HARD COAL IS COMING

Miners Are Returning to Work This Week.

Wilkes-Barre Convention Ratifies New Wages Agreement and the Men Who Have Been Idle for Five Months Take Up Their Tools Again—Prices Will Not Be Any Higher.

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., Sept. 11.—The anthracite wage agreement, sending the miners back to work at once, after more than five months of idleness, was ratified by the tridistrict convention of the hard coal diggers Saturday night.

Under the agreement, $55,000 mine workers return to work at the rate of wages they received when they suspended mining on March 31. The new contract will be in effect until August 31 next year, when a new arrangement is to be negotiated "in the light" of a report to be made by a commission, which both sides recommended be created by Congress, to investigate every phase of the anthracite industry.

The peace pact was ratified by a viva-voce vote. Immediately after the ratification a motion was unanimously adopted lifting the suspension at once, and the men will be permitted to return to work this week. As soon as the convention adjourned leaders of the United Mine Workers immediately made preparations to have the formal contract signed by both sides at Scranton.

When the men return to work the suspension will have lasted 163 days, one day less than the great strike of 1902.

It is expected that full production will not be obtained for several weeks. As soon as the mines are not in the best condition and it is probable a shortage of labor will be experienced at the start in some sections, due largely to the fact that many men left the regions to seek work in other places.

The end came after a long day of oratory, in which those for or against the peace pact put forth their best speakers. International President John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Workers, who has been devoting all his time to the anthracite situation since the Cleveland settlement in the bituminous coal fields, made the concluding speech in favor of ratification.

In his speech the miners' chief gave a comprehensive review of the conditions that confronted the union in the fight to retain present wage scales.

The determined contest of the union in rejecting arbitration in all forms was also reviewed. Mr. Lewis declared that the fighting policy of the union, no form of arbitration would be accepted.

No Higher Prices.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Sept. 11.—No higher anthracite coal prices than prevailed when the suspension of mining began and limiting the supply to domestic consumers to 60 days were the decisions Saturday of a conference of the Pennsylvania Fuel Commission and independent coal operators.

Smuts Seeking New Port.

LONDON, Sept. 11.—In quest for a new port following a breakdown of the negotiations with the Portuguese regarding rights at the port of Lourenco Marques, Gen Smuts, Premier of South Africa, is making a tour through Zululand, says a Reuter despatch from Durban.

Speaking at Eshowe, the Premier said he had come to have a look at Kosi Bay and to see what could be done for the East Transvaal coalfields, whose outlet had been handicapped owing to the unsatisfactory handling of export coal at Delagoa Bay.

Progress, he said, must now be made with the scheme for creating another port in British territory and the investigations have already begun.

Britain Building Aerial Cruiser.

LONDON, Sept. 11.—The Daily Chronicle's Aviation Correspondent, writing on the race between nations in the development of the aeroplane, refers to a British winged aerial cruiser now being completed by the Fairy Aviation Company.

Many features of it are official secrets. It is constructed of metal, develops not far short of 3,000 horsepower, and will be capable of long cruising flights without alighting for fuel. The weight is 15 tons.

Another leviathan of the British Air Service, says the correspondent, is a great Wingco troop transport with a hull of steel tubing, capable of carrying 25 soldiers with their full equipment for long distances.

Youths Killed by Lightning.

REGINA, Sask., Sept. 11.—Harold and Bert Wood, brothers, 18 and 20 years old, were instantly killed by lightning at Semans, Sask., when a terrific electrical storm swept the district last Monday afternoon. Following the storm the telephone lines were down for many miles.

The Wood brothers came from Westboro, Ont., to work in the harvest. With David Poag, they crawled under a wheat stack when the storm broke. Poag was stunned by the bolt that killed the brothers. When he regained consciousness, he was able to summon people.

CLEMENCEAU IS COMING.

Will Try to Re-kindle Idealism In United States.

PARIS, Sept. 11.—Georges Clemenceau's proposed visit to the United States bids fair to stir up a political tempest of the most violent kind in France.

He says he goes to formulate before the American public his views on "The rights and duties of each people in the tremendous world crisis created by the war." But in the press and among well-informed politicians, the belief prevails that M. Clemenceau is animated by motives far greater than a mere desire to reply to the anti-Americans utterances of Rudyard Kipling.

His aim, it is thought, is the resurrection of that entente between the United States, Great Britain and France which he named in 1919, which the United States Senate destroyed, and without which, to his mind, restoration of peace and economic tranquility in Europe cannot be achieved.

Should the Tiger attain his object, he would return to France with greater potential strength politically than Napoleon possessed on his return from Elba.

Consequently his enemies already are sharpening their swords for a violent assault upon the project, while his partisans are girding their loins in defence of their old leader's come back.

At Saint Vincent-Sur-Jard, where the former Premier is living hermit-like life in a diminutive cottage by the sea, an eager cohort of newspaper editors, rushed thither from Paris, are frantically seeking further details. At Vittel, where he has been taking the cure, Andre Tardieu, the Tiger's political parliamentary spokesman, is preparing to return to Paris.

In Paris the Petit Parisien, foremost of the French independent papers, declares, at the end of a long editorial entitled "A Fine Mission"; France already owes much to Clemenceau. But if he understands how to touch the heart of that great idealist people, which is the American people, it will be a service of Europe which will owe him a statue."

Adopts His Own Daughter.

WORCESTER, Mass., Sept. 11.—Six-year-old Rose Edna Casey, of this city, has become the adopted child of her own father by decree of the Probate Court, thereby revealing one of the strangest stories that has ever been recorded in the courts here.

The decree, signed by Judge Frederick H. Chamberlain, permits Mr. and Mrs. Carlton E. McDougall, of Worcester, to adopt the child and to change her name to McDougall.

It was only two years ago that the little girl's mother, Alice E. McDougall, died, and she and her brother, Harry, were adopted by their maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Casey, of Worcester, and their names changed to Casey by authority of the court.

Then the grandmother died, and McDougall married his child's second wife decided to adopt the girl. The child's grandfather, with whom the boy is now living, assented to the change of name and adoption.

WEBSTER—MAN'S MAN

by Peter B. Kyne

Author of "Cappy Ricks," "The Valley of the Giants," Etc.

Copyright by Peter B. Kyne

Webster backed dazedly toward the wall, firing as he did so, but he was too dizzy to shoot effectively, and the semicircle of bayonets closed in on his front. He had wounded three men without stopping them; a second more, and their long, eighteen-inch bayonets would have been in his vitals, when into the midst of the melee, from the rear, dashed Don Juan Cafetero, shrieking like a fiend and swinging his rifle, which he held grasped by the barrel.

Webster saw a bayonet hanging toward him. He lifted his leg and caught the point on his boot-heel while with his last cartridge he killed the man behind the bayonet, just as the latter's next-rank man thrust straight and true in under the American's left arm, while a third man jabbed at his stomach and got the bayonet home in his hip. These two thrusts, delivered almost simultaneously, by their impact carried their victim backward against the wall, against which his head collided with a smart thud. He fell forward on his face; before his assailants could draw back for a finishing thrust, in case the gringo needed it, which they doubted, Don Juan Cafetero had brained them both.

Standing above the man he loved, with the latter's body between his outspread legs, Don Juan Cafetero stood for the final accounting, his bu-ternalik eyes gleaming hatred and warmndness, his lips drawn back from his snuggle teeth, his breast rising and falling as they closed in around him. For a few seconds he was visible swinging his rifle like a flail, magnificent, unterrified—and then a bayonet slipped in under his guard. It was the end.

With a final great effort that used up the last strength in his drink-corroded muscles he hurled his rifle into the midst of his four remaining enemies, before he swayed and toppled full length on top of Webster, shielding with his poor body the man who had fanned to flame the dying ember of manhood in the wreck that drink and the devil had cast up on the Caribbean coast.

For Don Juan Cafetero it had been a long, joyous, thirsty day, but at last the day was done. And in order to make certain, a soldado jabbed him once more through the vitals before he fled with the other survivors.

* * * * * * *

For half an hour after Webster left her to assist the great-hearted Mother Jenks in the rough care of the wounded, Dolores, absorbed in her work of mercy, gave all of her thought to the grim task before her. The cries, followed by the sudden, savage outbreak of fire when the guards made their dash from the palace, brought Webster and Don Juan, to mind instantly. In a quick access of terror and apprehension she clung, trembling, to stolid old Mother Jenks.

"Somebody's breakin' in or breakin' out," the veteran decided calmly. "Come to the corner, dearie, an' 'ave a look."

She half dragged Dolores to the corner, from which they had an unobstructed view down the cross-street to its intersection three blocks distant with the Calle San Rosario; consequently they saw the dozen or more survivors of that ill-fated dash from the north gate of the palace flush for a second across their line of vision. Mother Jenks crooked dismally, like a disreputable old raven; she was trying to cheer.

"The rats are lovin' the sinkin' ship," she wheezed. "Come an' see them tyke the devils as killed my sainted 'Enery." She broke eagerly from Dolores' detaining grasp and ran down the street. Dolores hesitated a moment; then, reasoning that her duty lay in pursuing Mother Jenks and preventing her from rushing headlong into the conflict, she followed.

Evidently the fleeing guards had scurried around a corner into a cross-street shortly after Dolores and Mother Jenks had seen them gallop past, for the firing down the Calle San Rosario had ceased entirely by the time they reached it. They stood a moment at the corner, gazing up the street at the dead—man and beast—with the wounded crawling out of the shambles on to the sidewalk.

Mother Jenks nodded approvingly as triumphant shouts from the north gate told her the Ruey men were pouring into the palace; with their arms about each other the two women watched and waited—and presently the national flag on the palace came fluttering down from its staff, to be raised again with the red banner of revolution fluttering above it, the insignia of a nation reborn.

"My lamb," Mother Jenks said softly to Dolores, "the war is over. Wot's the matter with goin' in the south gate an' wytin' on the palace steps for the provisional president to make his grand ountray? If we 'estiate five minures they'll have a bloomin' guard on both gates, arskin' us 'oo we are an' wot we want."

"But Mr. Webster will come back to that back street looking for me; I must go back and wait there for him."

"Wyte, nothink!" Mother Jenks overruled the girl's protest roughly. "E'll 'ave gone into the palace with the crowd for a look-see; we'll meet 'im there an' syve 'im the trouble o' huntin' for us. Come!" And she half dragged the shrinking girl toward the gate, a block distant, where only a few minutes before Webster and Don Juan Cafetero had made their ineffectual stand.

"Don't look at the blighters, honey," Mother Jenks warned Dolores when, in approaching the gate, she caught sight of the bodies strewed in front of it. "My word! Regular bally mess—an' all spiggeties! Cawn't be. Must 'ave been some white meat on this bird, as myssainted 'Enery uster s'y. Hah! Thought so! There's a red-headed 'un! Gawd's truth! An' 'e done all that—for strike me pink! It's Don Juan Cafetero."

Mother Jenks stepped over the gory corpses ringed around Don Juan and knelt beside him. "Don Juan!" she cried. "You bally interferin' blighter, you've gone an' got it!"

She ran her strong old arms under his dripping body, lifted him and laid his red head on her knee, while with her free hand she drew a small flask of brandy from her dress pocket.

Don Juan opened his buttermilk eyes and gazed up at her with slowly dawning wonder, then closed them again, drowsily, like a tired child. Mother Jenks pressed the flask to his blue lips; as the brandy bit his tongue he rolled his fiery head in feeble protest and weakly set his teeth against the lip of the flask. Wondering, Mother Jenks withdrew it—and then Don Juan spoke.

"Have ye the musther's permission, allanah? I give him me worrd av honor—not—to dhrink—till—he—give—permission. He—was good—to me—troth he was—God—love—me—boss me."

His jaw dropped loosely; his head rolled sideways; but ere his spirit fled, Don Juan Cafetero had justified the faith of his master. He had kept his word of honor. He had made good on his brag to die for John Stuart Webster and welcome the chance! Mother Jenks held his body a little while, gazing into his face no longer ruthless; then gently she eased it to the ground and for the first time was aware that Dolores knelt in the dirt opposite to her striving to lift the body upon which Don Juan had been lying.

The strength of Dolores was unequal to the task; so Mother Jenks, hardened, courageous, calm as her sainted 'Enery at his inglorious finish, rose and stepped around to her side to help her. She could see this other was a white man, too; coolly she stooped and wiped his gory face with the hem of her apron. And then she recognized him!

"Lift him up! Give him to me!" Dolores sobbed. "Oh, Caliph, my poor dear, big-hearted blundering boy!"

She got her arm under his head; Mother Jenkins aided her; and the limp body was lifted to a sitting position; then Dolores knelt on one knee, supporting him with the other, and drew his head over on her shoulder; with her white cheek cuddles against his, she spoke into his deaf ears the little, tender, foolish words that mothers have for their children, that women have for the stricken men of their love. She pleaded with him to open his eyes, to speak to her and tell her he still lived; so close was his face to hers that she saw an old but very faint white scar running diagonally across his left eyebrow—and kissed it.

Presently strong arms took him from her; clinging to somebody—she knew not whom—she followed, moaning broken-heartedly, while eight men, forming a rude litter with four rifles passed under the body, bore Webster to the shade of a tufted palm inside the palace gate.

As they laid Webster down for a moment there Dolores saw a tall, youthful man, of handsome features and noble bearing approach and look at him. In his eyes there were tears. A sob escaped him as with a little impulsive, affectionate movement he patted John Stuart Webster's cheek.

"My friend!" the fighting Dolores heard him murmur. "My great-hearted, whimsical, lovable John Webster. You made it possible for me to meet you here tonight—and this is the meeting!"

CHAPTER XVI.

While Ricardo watched beside the unconscious Webster one of his aides galloped up the street, to return presently with a detachment with stretchers, into which Webster and Don Juan Cafetero were laid and carried up the palace driveway into the huge golden reception hall where only the night before Sarros had greeted the belles and beaux of his capital. In the meantime Mother Jenks had succeeded in restoring Dolores to consciousness; supported by the indomitable old woman the girl slowly followed the grim procession until, at the door of the reception room, they found their further progress barred by a sentry.

"The red-haired man is dead," he informed them in response to their eager queries. "If you want his body," he continued, hazarding a guess as to their mission, "I guess you can have it. There he is." And the sentry pointed to the stretcher which had been set down along the wall of the reception hall.

"Ow about the other?" Mother Jenks demanded. Don Juan Cafetero had, unfortunately, been so much of a nuisance to her in life that she was not minded to be troubled greatly over him in death, although the Spartanlike manner of his exit had thrilled the British bulldog blood in her.

"The big fellow isn't quite dead yet, but I'm afraid he's a goner. The surgeons have him in this room now. Friend of yours, Miss?" he inquired in tones freighted with neighborly sympathy.

Dolores nodded.

"Sorry I can't let you in, Miss," he continued, "but the General ordered me to keep everybody out until the doctors have finished looking him over. If I was you, I'd wait in that room across the hall then you can get the first news when the doctors come out."

Mother Jenks accepted his advice and steered her charge into the room indicated. As they waited, Ricardo Ruey stood anxiously beside the table on which John Stuart Webster's big, limp body reposed, while Doctor Pacheco, assisted by a Sobrantean corporal, went deftly over him with surgical scissors and cut the blood-soaked clothing from his body.

"He breathes very gently," the rebel leader said, presently. "Is there any hope?"

The little doctor shrugged. "I fear not. That bayonet-thrust in the left side missed his heart but not his lung."

"But apparently he hasn't bled much from that wound."

"The hemorrhage is probably internal. Even if that congestion of blood in the lungs does not prove fatal very shortly, he cannot, in his weakened state, survive the traumatic fever from all these wounds. It is bound—hello, how our poor friend still lives with the bayonet broken off in his body—for here is steel—hah! Not a bayonet, but a pistol."

He unbuttoned the wounded man's coat and found a strap running diagonally up across his breast and over the right shoulder, connecting with another strap under the left arm. The doctor unbuckled this strap and removed the holster, which contained Webster's spare gun; Ricardo, glancing disinterestedly at the shrunken cartridge belt, noted a new, rectangular hole in the leather holster. He picked it up, withdrew the pistol, and found a deep scratch, recently made, along the blued steel close to the vulcanite butt.

When Ricardo glanced at Pacheco after his scrutiny of the pistol and holster, the doctor's dark eyes were regarding him mirthfully.

"I have been unnecessarily alarmed, my general," said Pacheco. "Our dear friend has been most fortunate in his choice of wounds——"

"He's a lucky Yankee; that's what he is, my dear Pacheco. A lucky Yankee!" Ricardo bent over and examined the bayonet-wound in Webster's left side. "He took the point of the steel on his pistol he happened to be wearing under his left arm," he went on to explain. "That turned the bayonet and it slid along his ribs, making a superficial flesh-wound."

Pacheco nodded. "And this bullet merely burned the top of his right shoulder, while another passed through his biceps without touching the bone. His most severe wound is this jab in the hip."

They stripped every stitch of clothing from Webster and went over him carefully. At the back of his head they found a little clotted blood from a small split in the scalp; also they found a lump of generous proportions. Pacheco laughed briefly but contentedly.

"Then he is not even seriously injured?" Ricardo interrupted that laugh.

"I would die of fright if I had to fight this fine fellow a month from today," the little doctor predicted. "The man is in superb physical condition; it is the bump on the head that renders him unconscious—not loss of blood."

As if to confirm this expert testimony Webster at that moment breathed long and deeply, screwed up his face and shook his head very slightly. Thereafter for several minutes he gave no further evidence of an active interest in life—seeing which Pacheco decided to take prompt advantage of his unconsciousness and probe the wounds in his arm and shoulder for the fragments of clothing which the bullets must have carried into them. After ten minutes of probing Pacheco announced that he was through and ready to bandage; whereupon John Stuart Webster said faintly but very distinctly, in English:

"I'm awfully glad you are, Doc. It hurt like h—l! Did you manage to get a bite on that fishing trip?"

"Jack Webster, you scoundrel!" Ricardo yelled joyously, and he shook the patient with entire disregard of the latter's wounds. "Oh, man, I'm glad you're not dead."

"Your sentiments appeal to me strongly, my friend. I'm—too—tired to look—at you. Who the devil—are you?"

Fell a silence, while Webster prepared for another speech. "Where am I?"

"In the palace. We won pulled-up and that forty-thousand dollar bet of yours is safe. I'll cash the ticket for you tomorrow morning."

"D——n the forty thousand. Where's my Croppy Boy?"

"Your what?"

"My wild Irish blackthorn, Don Juan Cafetero."

"I hope, old man, he has ere now that which all brave Irishmen and true deserve—a harp with a crown in it for the Irish have the harp without the crown, you know."

"How did he die?" Webster whispered.

"He died hard, with the holes in front—and he died for you."

Two big tears trickled slowly through Webster's closed lids and rolled across his pale cheek. "Poor, lost, lonesome, misunderstood wreck," he murmured presently, "he was an artist in all things. He used to sing those wonderfully poetic ballads of his people—I remember one that began: 'Green were the fields where my forefathers dwelt.' I think his heart was in Kerry—so we'll send him there. He's my dead, Ricardo; care for his body, because I'm—going to plant Don Juan with the—shamrocks. They didn't understand him here. He was an exile—so I'm going to send him—home."

"He shall have a military funeral," Ricardo promised.

"From the cathedral," Webster added. "And take a picture of it for his people. He told me about them. I want them to think he amounted to something, after all. And when you get this two-by-four republic of yours going again, Rick, you might have your congress award Don Juan a thousand dollars ora for capturing Sarros. Then we can send the money to his old folks."

"But he didn't capture Sarros," Ricardo protested. "The man escaped when the guards cut their way through."

"He didn't. That was a ruse while he beat it out the gate where you found me. I saw Don Juan knock him senseless with the butt of his—pistol after I'd brought down his horse."

"Do you think he's there yet?"

"He may be—provided all this didn't happen the day before yesterday. If I wanted him, I'd go down and look for him, Rick."

"I'll go right away, Jack."

"One minute, then. Send a man around to that little back street where they have the wounded—it's a couple of blocks away from here—to tell Mother Jenks and the young lady with her I'll not be back."

"They're both outside now. They must have gone looking for you, because they found you and Don Juan first and then told me about it."

"Who told you?"

"Mother Jenks."

"Oh! Well, run along and get your man."

Ricardo departed on the run, taking the sentry at the door with him and in his haste giving no thought to Mother Jenks and her companion waiting for the doctor's verdict. In the palace grounds he gathered two more men and bade them follow him; leading by twenty yards, he emerged at the gate and paused to look around him.

Some hundred feet down the street from the palace gate Sarros' cavalry charger lay dead. When Webster's bullet brought the poor beast down, his rider had fallen clear of him, only to fall a victim to the ferocity of Don Juan Cafetero. Later, as Sarros lay stunned and bleeding beside his mount, the stricken animal in its death-struggle had half risen, only to fall again, this time on the extended left leg of his late master; consequently when Sarros recovered consciousness following the thoughtful attentions of his assailant, it was to discover himself a hopeless prisoner. The heavy carcass of his horse pinned his foot and part of his leg to the ground, rendering him as helpless and desperate as a trapped animal.

For several minutes now he had been striving frantically to release himself; with his sound right leg pressed against the animal's backbone he tried to gain sufficient purchase to withdraw his left leg from the carcass.

As Ricardo caught sight of Sarros he instinctively realized that this was his mortal enemy; motioning his men to stand back, he approached the struggling man on tiptoe and thoughtfully possessed himself of the dictator's pistol, which lay in back of him, but not out of reach. Just as he did so, Sarros, apparently convinced of the futility of his efforts to free himself, surrendered to fate and commenced rather pitifully to weep with rage and despair.

Ricardo watched him for a few seconds, for there was just sufficient of the blood of his Castilian ancestors still in his veins to render this sorry spectacle rather an enjoyable one to him. Besides, he was 50 per cent Iberian, a race which can hate quite as thoroughly as it can love, and for a time Ricardo even nourished the thought of still further indulging his thirst for revenge by pretending to aid Sarros in his escape! Presently, however, he put the treacherous thought from him; seizing the dead horse by the tail, he dragged the carcass off his enemy's leg, and while Sarros sat up, tailor-fashion, and commenced to rub the circulation back into the bruised member, Ricardo seated himself on the rump of the dead horse and appraised his prisoner critically.

Sarros glanced up, remembered his manners and very heartily and gracefully thanked his deliverer.

"It is not a matter for which thanks are due me, Sarros," Ricardo replied coldly. "I am Ricardo Luis Ruey, and I have come back to Sobrante to pay up my father's debt to you. You will remember having forced the obligation upon me in the cemetery some fifteen years ago."

For perhaps ten horrified seconds Sarros stared at Ricardo; then the dark blood in him came to his defense; his tense pose relaxed; the fright and despair left his swarthy countenance as if erased with a moist sponge, leaving him as cool, stolid and indifferent as a cigarstore Indian. He fumbled in his coat pocket for a gold cigarette case, selected a cigarette, lighted it and blew smoke at Ricardo. The big was up; he knew it; and with admirable nonchalance he declined to lower his presidential dignity by discussing or considering it. He realized it would delight his captor to know he dreaded to face the issue, and it was not a Sarros practice to give aid and comfort to the enemy.

"Spunky devil!" Ricardo reflected, forced to admiration despite himself. Aloud he said: "You know the code of our people, Sarros. An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth."

Sarros bowed. "I am at your service," he replied carelessly.

"Then at daylight tomorrow morning, I shall make settlement." Ricardo beckoned his men to approach. "Take this man and confine him under a double guard in the arsenal," he ordered. "Present my compliments to the officer in charge there and tell him I will send him there. He's my dead, Ricardo; care for his body, because I'm—going to plant Don Juan with the—shamrocks. They didn't understand him here. He was an exile—so I'm going to send him—home."

"He shall have a military funeral," Ricardo promised.

"From the cathedral," Webster added. "And take a picture of it for his people. He told me about them. I want them to think he amounted to something, after all. "I Am General Ruey."

to the arsenal under guard."

"Gor' strike me pink!" the old lady cried. "'Ave I lived to see this day!" Her face was wreathed in a happy smile. "I wonder 'ow the beggar feels to 'ave the shoe on the other foot, eh—the 'eartless 'ound; I'm 'opin' this General Ruey will 'ave the blighter shot."

"You need have no worry on that score, Mrs. Jenks. I'm General Ruey. Andrew Bowers was just my summer name, as it were."

"Angels guard me! Wot the bloomin' 'ell surprise won't we 'ave next. Wot branch o' the Ruey tribe do you belong to? Are you a nephew o' him that was president before Sarros shot 'im? Antonio Ruey, who was 'arf brother to the president, 'ad a son 'e called Ricardo. Are you 'im, might I arsk?"

"I am the son of Ricardo the Beloved," he answered proudly.

"Not the lad as was away at school when 'is father was hexecuted?"

"I am that same lad, Mrs. Jenks. And who are you? You seem to know a deal of my family history."

"I," the old publican replied with equal pride, "am Mrs. Col. 'Enery Jenks, who was your father's chief of hartillery an' 'ad the hextreme honor o' dyin' in front of the same wall 'im. By the w'y, 'ow's Mr. Webster?" she added, suddenly remembering the subject closest to her heart just then.

"His wounds are trifling. He'll live, Mrs. Jenks."

"Well, that's better than gettin' poked in the eye with a sharp stick," the old dame decided philosophically.

"Do you remember my little sister, Mrs. Jenks?" Ricardo continued. "She was in the palace when Sarros attacked it; she perished there."

"I believe I 'ave got a slight recollection o' the pitiper sir," Mother Jenks answered cautiously. To herself she said: "I s'y, 'Enrietta, 'ere's a pretty go. 'E don't know the lamb is livin' an' in the next room! My word, wot a riot w'en 'e meets 'er!"

"I will see you again, Mrs. Jenks. I must have a long talk with you," Ricardo told her, and passed on into the palace; whereupon Mother Jenks once more fervently implored the Almighty to strike her pink, and the iron restraint of a long, hard, exciting life ruling relaxed for last, the good soul bowed her gray head in her arms and wept, moving her body from side to side the while and demanding, of no one in particular, a single legitimate reason why she, a blooming old baggage and not fit to live, should be the recipient of such manifold blessings as this day had brought forth.

In the meantime Ricardo, with his hand on the knob of the door leading to the room where Webster was having his wounds dressed, paused suddenly, his attention caught by the sound of a soh, long-drawn and inexpressibly pathetic. He listened and made up his mind that a woman in the room across the entrance hall was bewailing the death of a loved one who answered to the name of Caliph and John, darling. Further eavesdropping convinced him that Caliph, John, darling, and Mr. John Stuart Webster were one and the same person, and so he jilted his head on one side like a cock robin and considered.

"By jingo, that's most interesting," he decided. "The wounded hero has a sweetheart or a wife—and an American, too. She must be a recent acquisition, because all the time we were together on the steamer coming down here he never spoke of either, despite the fact that we got friendly enough for such confidences. Something funny about this. I'd better sound the old lady before I start passing out words of comfort to that unhappy female."

He passed on into the room. John Stuart Webster had, by this time, been washed and bandaged, and one of the Sarros servants (for the ex-dictator's retinue still occupied the palace) had, at Dr. Pacheco's command, prepared a guest chamber upstairs and furnished a night gown of ample proportions to cover Mr. Webster's bebandaged but otherwise naked person. A stretcher had just arrived, and the wounded man was about to be carried upstairs. The late financial backer of the revolution was looking very pale and dispirited; for once in his life his whimsical, banntering nature was subdued. His eyes were closed, and he did not open them when Ricardo entered.

"Well, I have Sarros," the latter declared.

Webster paid not the slightest attention to this announcement. Ricardo bent over him. "Jack, old boy," he queried, "do you know a person of feminine persuasion who calls you Caliph?"

John Stuart Webster's eyes and mouth flew wide open. "What the devil!" he tried to roar. "You haven't been speaking to her, have you? If you have, I'll never forgive you, because you've spoiled my little surprise party."

"No, I haven't been speaking to her, but she's in the next room crying fit to break her heart because she thinks you've been killed."

Canadianizing Canada

TRAVEL is one of the great elements in education and is one of the fundamentals of good citizenship. The desire to know one's own country should be inculcated into the system of every Canadian and to obtain any adequate knowledge, how can it be acquired better than by travel? "Canadians, See Canada," and "See Canada First," etc., have been adopted as slogans in the endeavor to create in the minds of Canadians the advantages of national travel and the attractions Canada has to offer.

The purport of this article is not only to give expression to the importance of Canadians seeing Canada that they may have a fuller appreciation of what their own country has to offer them in the way of scenery and interest, but to emphasize particularly the value of tourist travel to the nation, and the duty we owe ourselves in developing our tourist territory—so to speak to capitalize the scenery. Possibly no other country in the world gives up to its people a greater area of country for recreation purposes and these great playgrounds are not confined to any particular section but are spread from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Then again from the seashore resorts of the Atlantic and the lower St. Lawrence to the Pacific Coast the interests are so varied and so distinctly different from one another that our Canadian people may use their vacations for years and find new scenery and new interest annually. From the quiet beauty of the Maritime Provinces to the more rugged scenery of the Province of Quebec, the almost continuous lake and river country of northern Ontario, the Rocky Mountains so immense, beautiful, and wonderful, on to the Pacific Coast, one cannot imagine without personal vision and knowledge what a wonderful asset we have in our widespread playgrounds and national parks.

But to make the most of these wonderful heritages, to realize the fullest amount of profit, they must be developed. The Provincial and Dominion Governments must be keenly alive to what the possibilities are. Good roads to the wonder places and beauty spots are essential so that the way of the tourist may be made easy and attractive.

Much has been done by the railways to advertise our tourist territory, which has resulted in millions of dollars being spent in Canada annually, principally by our neighbors to the south of us. But the fringe has as yet only been touched. The Canadian National Railways have just opened Jasper Park Lodge, in Jasper Park, that largest and most wonderful of all our national parks, 4,400 square miles of magnificent mountainous scenery. There wild life roams unmolested and thousands of tourists from all parts of the globe will gladly assemble annually when the park is fully developed with good motor roads, and the system of lodges as auspiciously opened on June 15th last are extended through the park. Jasper Park is but one of the many feature places to be developed. Mount Robson Park, just fifty miles west from Jasper station, is another. Entirely in Mount Robson being the highest peak in the Canadian Rockies (13,068 feet), the park which is entirely within the province of British Columbia, and an Alpine Region in itself, but until such time as it is developed, the glory and majesty of its scenery is denied the tourist who does not choose to ride a cayuse.

By way of comparison it has been stated that tourist traffic in California alone nets approximately a hundred million dollars a year, and the more northern Pacific Coast States, Washington and Oregon, about fifty that amount to the total, whereas it has been said that tourist traffic in Canada all told, did not net beyond ten or twelve millions.

Again, the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have all the advantages of the State of Maine, but comparatively little has been done to develop them. What this development may mean in a measure can be expressed by the fact that Maine last year reaped a harvest of over $40,000,000 in tourist business.

Our wonderful tourist territory is undoubtedly one of our largest assets, and greatest heritages to be developed, and in the opinion of international travellers who have visited us, Canada possesses the finest aggregation of scenery in the world.—Toronto Saturday Night.

TWO BAD INSECT PESTS

Play Havoc With Some Field and Garden Crops.

The White Grub, Larva of the June Beetle—The Wireworm, Larva of the Click Beetle—How to Deal With Them—Calf Feeding a Real Problem.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Much injury is done to certain field and garden crops by the two insects named above. Hints as to their control are given below:

The White Grub.

The White Grub working and feeding beneath the soil on grass roots, field crops and garden crops, destroys many thousands of dollars' worth of effort each year, much of the destruction in the corn and strawberry fields can be charged to this insect. Pasture fields, hay meadows and grain fields are frequently much reduced in value through the loss of the plants being nibbled off by this pest. The parent of the white grub is the June Beetle, usually very common as a night flier in late June and July. The female beetle usually lays her eggs in grass land, meadows, lawns, roadsides, fence rows, bush pastures and such like places. The grubs hatch in twelve or fourteen days after the eggs are laid, they require two years to develop, living and feeding on grass and other plant roots until ready to pupate. The change from grub to mature insect takes place between the autumn of the second year and the following spring. Since these grubs live and feed beneath the soil for full two years it is impossible to reach them with poisons or sprays. Cultivation to break up the pupal cases or expose such to the weather or birds is the most efficient way to control. Old sod lands are usually heavily infested, and the crop following the first ploughing suffers heavily. A short rotation with deep autumn ploughing whenever possible, and not more than one year out of three in grass will keep the numbers down sufficiently to permit profitable crop production.

The Wireworm.

What is the matter with the crops? Much of the seed has failed to produce a plant and what plants have developed are weak and stunted. Scratch away the soil and look for the seed that you planted some weeks ago. If you find that the seed grain has been penetrated or partly devoured you will know that wireworms have been at work. You may even find "hard smooth shining slender cylindrical" six-legged larva at work boring and eating the seed. The wireworms vary in color from reddish to yellowish brown. The wireworm is the larva of a class of beetles commonly known as "Click Beetles" (Elateridae). These beetles frequent and breed in grass land. Fields that have been down in hay or pasture for a number of years are generally heavily infested and the first crop sown after breaking up the sod usually suffers considerably. Tillage is the best agent to destroy the young beetles. A short crop rotation that does not include hay or pasture more frequently than one year in four is generally effective in controlling this pest. The ploughing should be done early in the autumn, and fallow land worked as much as possible before the hard freezing weather stops tillage operations. The stirring of the soil will bring the pupal cells to cases and thereby expose the young or developing beetles to the cold and wet. All or many will perish, reducing the possibility of serious infestation on cultivated lands during the following season.—L. Stevenson, Sec. Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

Calf Feeding a Real Problem.

It is well known to dairymen that calves under six months old make little or no profit on their feed, however good the pasture may be. Their feeding is a real problem. For this reason dairymen will find that calves come in the fall so they will be ready for pasture in the spring.

Spring calves or calves born in late winter should be kept in the barn during the summer if they are to make proper growth. It is well to have a small pasture or yard in connection in which they can run a few hours a day. In hot weather, the night is the better time for them to be out of doors.

For feed, skimmilk, mixed whole oats and corn half and half, and clover or alfalfa hay, are always satisfactory rations. When there is a shortage of skimmilk or clover or alfalfa hay, some oilmeal will greatly add to the ration.

Calf scours are frequently caused in summer by unclean pails. Tin pails should be used, and they should be washed every day and set out in the sun.

DISTINCTIVE GARDENS

ARTISTIC SENSE NECESSARY TO GET BEST RESULTS.

An Unskilled or Semi-Skilled Gardener Has a Great Deal to Learn —A Few Hints That May Help Them to Get Better Effects Next year.

Usually the well-trained gardener will not try to find flaws in the work of his less skilled friends. Thus, without comment to guide them, the less gardeners may consider the work of his or her hands as near perfection as possible. The fact, however, remains that usually it is not. Here is the distinction:

Many times the writer has had his attention called to beds of bulbous plants, which, in the opinion of the owner, were works of art, and expressed great skill in arrangement. These beds were solid masses of color, the bulbs were planted the usual distances apart in straight lines, and neither expressed skill nor taste. Now, while the owner of the beds found great satisfaction in growing the bulbs, and rightly so, it would not be unkind to him to point out that little skill was required to plant the beds in the forementioned manner; in fact, to tell him that the merest novice could have done the same; or, to be plain about the matter, that he was not skilled in the work.

Now can the unskilled or semi-skilled gardener be convinced that his or her garden is not so attractive as it should be? It is very necessary that the knowledge be imparted to enable them to improve their standard, for only as the work of the individual improves will our gardening standards be elevated, and it is time that our thoughts were turned in that direction.

In an article of this nature there is not time to go deeply into the subject, but we might again consider the case of the beds of bulbs, and, by way of illustration, show how the owner of these could have made them distinctive and expressive of the greatest taste, and perhaps convince them, or others, that their methods were the crudest that could possibly be employed.

As it is the intention to make this article timely as well as instructive, it may be stated at this point that all the subjects mentions herein may be grown or procured now or in the near future, and so the text may be found equally beneficial to the trade which will supply them or the persons who will purchase.

This fall, when arranging your beds, try a few of the following combinations, and when they look their best next spring compare them with beds of solid masses of bulbs, and in an unbiased way decide which of the two methods of bedding is the better. It does not matter what the color scheme may be; hundreds may be planted which will show taste and judgment, and perhaps in no small way surprise the owner.

Carpet Bed.—Beds of yellow or orange Narcissi with yellow or orange shades of Violas. The Violas may be sown at once and be planted between the bulbs during spring. Beds of Narcissus Poeticus (Single white Arabis, pink or purple shades of Aubrietia. Blue Scilla or white shades of Polyanthus (cluster Primrose). Beds of Tulips, many shades, but especially pink and white, with pink or light-colored Aubretias, blue or otherwise. Darwin Tulips, many colors, with suitable shades of Polyanthus, individual or mixed colors of Violas. Beds of a bed of all, with Myosotis (Forget-me-not). Darwin Tulips so carpeted with any of these beautiful things seem to become all the more beautiful and dignified. The combination being eloquently expressive of grace and beauty, even to a point of great distinction.

Perhaps beds of bulbs looks so austere as one of double Hyacinths. Some beds are so severe that they are almost forbidding in appearance, and for no reason because the flowers are unlovely or forbidding in themselves, but because they are not associated with subjects that relieve the severity by blending them into harmonious relationship. The writer does not intend to say that it is always wrong to put solid masses of bulbs in beds, so please do not mistake him on this point. What he says is this: "That by a little judgment in using the bulbs, subjects for combination with bulbs, displays much more beautiful may be produced."

If you wish to have more beautiful spring beds than in former years, carry out some of the forementioned suggestions, or try a little experiment. Sow a few Pansies or Violas and grow them in pots and protect them over winter in a garden frame, or obtain them from the florist in spring. Buy only one-half the number of Hyacinths, Tulips or Daffodils necessary for the beds you filled last year, and use the Pansies or Violas for edging. If the result, in your opinion, justify the means, tell your friends about your beautiful beds.

Preach to them until they in turn become missionaries, spreading the gospel of beauty in every town and city, until the character of our spring gardens is changed. Use be just little less dependent. Let us produce within our own country more of the things necessary to make our gardens beautiful. Bring these facts to the notice of those who are interested, and ultimately into their hands for their use. When as a nation we produce the world not only become skilled in production, but will be able to place the product where it will be of the greatest use. We must learn to grow more flowers for our spring gardens, for these will be benefitted and beautified only to the extent of our knowledge of production.—Mabel J. Moore in Toronto Mail and Empire.

Sneezing.

Sneezing was the subject of much superstition in the ancient world, and almost always endowed with sinister import. Jewish folklore has it that in the first ages of the world sneezing was always a presage of death until the coming of Jacob. That astute patriarch, anxious lest he himself should perish from such an insignificant cause, besought the Almighty to endow sneezing with more beneficent attributes, and since then it has been lucky to sneeze between noon and midnight.

THREE-IN-ONE DRESS IN VOGUE

Convertible Frock Means More Clothes at Far Less Cost to the Wearer

PLAN FOR THE NEW COLORS

Latest Shades Serve Advantageously in Development of Many-In-One Outfits; Mauve, Cyclamen and Orange Are Conspicuous.

To have a convertible dress—you can't know the joy of that until you have owned one, notes a fashion writer in the New York Times. You may not like the sound of the "three-in-one." The idea may not strike you as possible for your particular needs. But just wait until you try it.

The time comes when that eternal question, "What shall I wear?" reappears. You are tired of all the old stand-bys. Your pocketbook will not bear the strain of further depletion. On a moment's notice you cannot reconstruct any garment, and your spirit simply demands, with an all-powering force, something new to recreate your appearance before the world. Then why not take the dress that makes three? Or it can make more—many more. And the foundation may carry on remarkably from season to season. You will like the sensation of having a frock which, merely by an addition, may be transformed into something that at least looks new. And after a while you will find yourself in that state of mind where you will automatically plan new portions of dresses instead of whole ones. You will find yourself slipping into this many-in-one idea so naturally that you will wonder you ever lived without so helpful a garment.

This is assuming that you have never owned one. But if you already have one, you cannot but welcome ideas to bring it strictly up to date. There are ways and ways of help ing it to rejuvenate itself and live on to enjoy a longer and more useful life.

The Foundation Slip.

There is a foundation slip made of the softest of silvery gray crepe in the heaviest of qualities. There is the becoming bateau neckline duly corded for a finish. There are the long, graceful shoulders, curved, too, which finish that portion of the modern and strictly accepted evening frock.

The girdle arrangement, to be sure, is of the handmade origin. It is beautifully designed, made and put together. Scraps of velvet in Pansies or any of the forementioned suggestions, or try a little experiment. Sow a few Pansies or Violas and grow them in pots and protect them over winter in a garden frame, or obtain them from the florist in spring. Buy only one-half the number of Hyacinths, Tulips or Daffodils necessary for the beds you filled last year, and use the Pansies or Violas for edging. If the result, in your opinion, justify the means, tell your friends about your beautiful beds.

Preach to them until they in turn become missionaries, spreading the gospel of beauty in every town and city, until the character of our spring gardens is changed. Use be just little less dependent. Let us produce within our own country more of the things necessary to make our gardens beautiful. Bring these facts to the notice of those who are interested, and ultimately into their hands for their use. When as a nation we produce the world not only become skilled in production, but will be able to place the product where it will be of the greatest use. We must learn to grow more flowers for our spring gardens, for these will be benefitted and beautified only to the extent of our knowledge of production.—Mabel J. Moore in Toronto Mail and Empire.

Jewish folklore has it that in the first ages of the world sneezing was always a presage of death until the coming of Jacob. Foundation Slip of Heavy Silver Gray Crepe Has Girdle of Brilliant Grapes to Transform It Into an Evening Dress.

pointed ends of the peplum are provided with tiny weights so that they droop conspicuously. Everything must droop, and if it can manage to sweep down in points, why, just so much the better for its style.

Now, there is one objection to the gray toning of this utility garment, and that is the perishable quality of its delicate tone. But, of course, that can be handled by means of diligent cleaning. The supposed good quality of the material is destined to stand any amount of wear and tear, and sometimes it is a great relief to have a dress, or to mention a series of dresses, which is light in tone. It then gives no hint that the color may be a part of economy. Instead, it steps away from any mundane tendency that is the reason of its lightness of color and its fragility of appearance.

Fresh-Looking Costume.

But if you should prefer something dark, then by all means construct it on the same lines and principles. Vary the designs as much as you choose; be free in your individual interpretation. There is no end to the joy you may experience by finding yourself so easily made the proud possessor of a fresh-looking costume. What matter if the foundation is not totally new? Who can tell the difference? You are the only one who is in on that secret, and there is a certain satisfaction in being able to fool the public so easily.

When the sharpest-eyed of your friends says "What a handsome new gown!" and you know that she has not recognized the old piece that makes the skirt, you feel that you have certainly accomplished an achievement of sorts. And so you have.

Women's clothes should not be an undue expense nor anything approaching a burden. It is right that their usefulness should be extended and the length of their days drawn out to something approaching utility. And at the same time, who wants them to lose any of their beauty and charm and femininity? Surely not the woman who wears them. They would hang on to these attributes at all other sacrifices. They must be beautiful. But they can be beautiful and practical, too. They can be sensible to the tune of charm, if only these women will study the ways and means by which to accomplish this end artistically.

In the New Colors.

It is an interesting feat to develop these many-in-one dresses in some of the newer colors with accessories, ring blouses and sashes chosen to contrast happily. Three of the noticeable new colors are mauve, cyclamen and orange. Orange appears strongly as a lining of a coat or as a blouse. Cyclamen and mauve are usually seen in trimmings and linings. Dresses and costumes, as a whole, are of neutral shades. Here and there a colored costume takes the eye. One is in mustard yellow cloth, with black satin and white organdie. The black satin shows as an under-petticoat and double sleeve. The organdie gives a touch of freshness to the throat and wrists. Organdie is seen on several coat frocks. It is crisp and spring-like, but the new fashion of swathing the throat with it is not so comfortable or practical as that which gave it to us as an open or round collar. A scarlet dress in crepe marocain is worn with a short black taffeta coat, which has two bands falling down the skirt from each hip to be caught up under the hem. The hat also is black.

ON RURAL LIBRARIES

THEY SHOULD BE EXTENDED AND MADE INTERESTING.

Farmers Ought to Have Access to the Most Recent Works of Good Authors, the Standard Magazines and Books of Non-Fiction—General Information and Recreation Are Valuable.

Is the farmer without a literary side to his nature? Does the average editor think so? If not, why is there so little space in an agricultural magazine devoted to literature?

True, the ordinary farmer is interested in the cultivation of crops, the special features of various breeds of cattle, and how to rear stock to the best advantage, but in his home does he not wish some diversion from that material side of life for an hour or two?

Let us think that the farmer's boy does not enjoy reading an article on some live subject of the day, a good yarn, an interesting sketch of a man or woman who has been a factor in making our country what it is to-day or furnishing the world with some of our conveniences and luxuries that we enjoy every day.

If the farmer's son does not find reading in the home which helps him into touch with it by frequenting the movies, amusement halls and parks, and as he only sees these high lights of city life, naturally he becomes dissatisfied with the bread and butter life of the farm and soon says good-bye to the old homestead and joins the ranks of unskilled laborers in our towns and cities. What must we do then to stop this gradual leakage from the farms that has caused so many vacant houses in the country and such a famine of houses in our towns and cities?

First, as farmers let us make it our business to see that in our community there is a good library which contains the most recent works of good authors, standard magazines, and the books of non-fiction such that furnish intelligent and interesting reading, and not ponderous volumes left on the shelves to harbor dust.

True, some will tell us that when our young people have access to public libraries they read chiefly fiction, but if this be really true in some cases, is it not the very highest type of that class that they are reading, and how much better have these books placed in their hands than have them select some trash at a book store?

So, are our boys and girls really committing a terrible sin when they are reading books in which the heroes and heroines are men and women of pure noble characters, even if they do fall in love with one another? Nay, instead are they not cultivating a taste for good literature, and as years go by will become the readers of the heavier type of books? And we may rest assured that these young people have no time to think of wasting their precious hours reading a dime novel than you would think of eating the culls in your orchard when there is abundance of wormy-checked apples waiting to be picked.

The magazines and books in the library also familiarize the farmer and his family with the writings of the day, and they are rendered capable of conversing on these subjects with the clergyman, the doctor or any other interested person with whom they may chance to meet. Hence they enjoy the companionship of men and women engaged in other callings and their daily life is made more pleasant for the professional people in their locality as well. Likewise the professional man becomes interested in the various phases of the farmer's life, and instead of an aloofness there is a congenial and brotherly love feeling in the neighborhood which tends to leaven the rough, hard spots of life and pour oil and wine over the little worries and troubles that infest our day.

We who are known the farmer will realize that he is not a cold, spiritless being, interested only in cows, crops and money, but is one who often yearns more for the heart-felt lay than the man or woman attired in the pink of fashion who rushes up and down the streets of our cities and towns seeking for some jazz music to tickle his ears.

Viewing the public library from another angle, we discover that it may be very beneficial to the social life of our community. When funds are to be raised, what better method can we adopt than to select a play and invite the lads and lasses to form the caste of characters. They will be delighted to assist and the play their dramatic ability on the public platform, and as amateur players the evenings for training will be a source of great pleasure.

These amateur plays may be staged at various centres, and the young people will make new acquaintances and find the hum-drum taken off their daily existence.

When we give our farmer boys opportunities like these we do not find them moping around longing for something they know not what, and then making a mad rush to the city in search of some bubble which, when it bursts, often leaves them stranded wrecks.

So if you have not a public library in your little rural district, do not delay, but get a few people interested, rent a room, create a small membership fee, buy a few good books, and watch your library grow and watch the faces glow. You will hear songs down on the farm.

More Land for Soldiers.

Farm lands with an estimated area of 125,000 acres, located in the Riding Mountain forest reserve in the west of Dauphin, were thrown open by the Dominion Government for free settlement by eligible returned soldiers. The land extends in patches throughout the entire reserve and is divided in 442 parcels.

PILE GOODS FOR NEXT FALL

Added Demand Is Now Predicted for the Dress Goods Which Possess High Luster.

Next fall promises to supply an added demand for dress goods which possess high luster. The vogue for such materials is already well established among the better class of wovens. The finished goods are expected to have a leading place in the business on cloakings. Twills, featuring the same luster, also promise well. The novelty cloths are tending toward a soft rep character. Quadrilles, or line checks, appear to be favorites, together with the shadow plaids in which the pattern is defined with nubbed yarn.

Roses of Silk.

Small roses of the material trim many afternoon and evening gowns. One particularly pretty frock was of pink open crepe and showed the scallop edges bordered with three rows of small silk roses. Similar roses formed a shaped girdle over which fell the edge of the long-waisted semi-fitted blouse, and the short sleeves were ornamented with the roses.

Lace Effects in Silk.

Knitted dresses are becoming less confined to sports types, and both in silk and in wool they have been seen in lace effects intended for informal evening wear.

SEE BIG DEMAND FOR LACES

Paris Is Sponsoring Material for Frocks, Hats, Neckwear and Other Accessories.

The outlook for laces this season is decidedly promising. Paris is sponsoring lace, it was said, not only in frocks and hats, but in neckwear and accessories. This firm finds an increasing use of it on the part of the manufacturers as well as the dressmakers.

The cutting-up trade favors Spanish flouncings and allovers both in staples and high shades. One dealer emphasized cinnamon brown as particularly good and named as other popular shades such colors as mimosa, cornflower blue, coffee, navy and sand. Though the usual designs for this type of lace are floral, an attractive Chinese pattern is shown. Spanish lace is being sold to the retailers as well as the manufacturers, it was said.

Hand-made filet is much in demand and a new type of work called Margot is being produced on a filet mesh. Irish lace also shows the new accents with touches of colored stitching.

Venise bandings are very popular just now, it was stated, and a great deal of the new silk-and-wool lace is being sold.

Carrickmacross on filet is another novelty which is shown.

Lace is being used by blouse and millinery people as well as dressmakers. A great deal of bandings and bandings are being sold for hats in the high shades as well as staples, and the biggest demand centers about widths from six to twelve inches. Black is stronger than white this season, it was said, but both are good.

CHIC FOR THE SUMMER FROCK

Ginghams, Organdies and Unbleached Muslin Aid in Easy Development of New Apparel.

One smart little gingham frock seen recently, in a yellow and white check, was trimmed with latticed insertions formed of white organdie set lengthwise of the skirt as far as to give it a panelled effect, the waist being similarly treated. A row of the insertion trimmed each outer sleeve and the neck was finished with an organdie frill.

Organdie is a fabric that promises to have a strong vogue for summer and if a good quality is selected an organdie dress will give splendid service. It is easy to launder, requiring no starch and needs but little in the way of trimming.

The vogue for aprons and blouse dresses made of plain old-fashioned unbleached muslin continues strong, and some effective little garments may easily be developed, with plain color chambray or sateen, checked gingham or flowered cretonne as the trimming.

Soap Bubbles Aids Science.

Every one who buys gasoline for his automobile has a direct concern in the efficiency of engines, the study of which is being assisted by soap bubbles, according to Popular Mechanics Magazine. These are now being used at the Bureau of Standards in determining the rate of propagation of flame in combustible mixtures of gases. Strangely enough, for years there has been sought a means whereby explosions could be studied under constant pressure free from complicating circumstances, but it was just recently pointed out at this institution that soap bubbles afford an ideal solution what is wanted.

Toronto, Sept. 9th—Jean Robinson, aged 28, told Wm. Colclough that their love affair of several years standing was over as she intended to go away to marry another man. Last evening Colclough went to the rooms of the girl at 55 Mutual street with a phial of carbolic acid he had just purchased at the drug store and threw it in her face. She is permanently disfigured say doctors at the Toronto general hospital, although hope to save her eyesight. Colclough, after throwing the acid, pulled from another pocket a bottle of poison and drank most of the contents. Police rushed the pair to the hospital and the man will probably recover.

They are going to have a great Fair at Picton this year, in fact, the greatest ever held, as they are favored with three governmental exhibits, consisting of War Trophies, and two Agricultural exhibits, one from the Live Stock Branch of the Department of Agriculture, the other from the Central Experimental Farm. The two latter will occupy one hundred feet of running space, with a background 8 feet in heighth, and require a width of 6 feet. In the attractive line they have secured a string of high jumpers and high steppers that appeared at the Cobourg Horse Show. They are putting on good races, good baseball games, and have secured a Big Midway. It will be well worth your while to take in Picton Fair.

Among the hundreds of Government War Trophies shown at Picton Fair on September 19th, 20th, 21st, and 22nd, will be the French M.M. Gun; "The Wonder Gun of Mystery"; Russian Machine Gun, telephone taken from Hindenburg's headquarters, flag made by the people of Mons to greet Canadians in 1918, German flag captured by Canadians, Von-Muller's overcoat, Prince Joachim's helmet, (this magnificent helmet is surmounted by Osprey feathers 18 in. high, and was worn by Prince Joachim, the Kaiser's youngest son who comitted suicide); Death's Head Hussar Helmets, and many other helmets from different German regiments. A large German periscope will be shown at Picton Fair for the first time, as it has never been unpacked since taken from the field of battle; one-man tank, machine guns, mortars, aerial bombs, gas mask, and other trophies, together with a large collection of war pictures, military decorations, flags, epaulettes will make this feature of the Fair worth a trip to Picton. Remember that the Str. Brockville will take you there on Thursday, September 21st. Good hot meals served in the Dining Hall on the Fair grounds.

"Gathered Along the Trail"

They were on the barrack square, going through musketry drill. "I told you to take a fine sight," said the sergeant to a new recruit. "You ought to know what a fine sight is by now. What is it?"

"A very big boat, full of sergeants, sinking in mid-ocean," answered the recruit.

A certain absent-minded surgeon got into trouble recently for cutting the appendix out of every book in a public library.

SWEATERS $1.49

Autumn Suit Days are Here. We are Splendidly Ready to Serve You.

Many women prefer buying a Fall Suit because they secure heavier materials, as well as heavier linings and inter-linings.. You are thus enabled to wear your suit later in the fall and possibly all winter.

Because Tweed Suits were so well accepted this Spring, fashion has been induced to create styles suitable for Fall. We are showing several most attractive garments, attractive from a material view-point as well as from a style view-point.

The graceful long Coats are mannishly tailored to the last notch. In every case the collar muffles snugly about the neck. Belts and pockets are also used.

Obtainable in beautiful Lovat Heather Mixtures and rich Oxford Grey Shades.

Priced at $40.00, $45.00 and $47.50 each.

We are also showing a magnificent range of Tricotine, Velour, Duvetyn and Broadcloth Suits in all the latest style, conceptions and trimmings.

Priced from $37.50 to $77.50.

HATS THAT CATER TO SMART YOUTH, TO MATRONS, TO BUSINESS WOMEN, TO SCHOOL GIRLS—ARE HERE IN ABUNDANCE.

One of the outstanding phazes of the Autumn Millinery is founded on this fact, "That most of the style is created in the shape" rather than in the trimmings.

But when trimmings are used they are most strikingly effective. Possibly a bold ribbon bow, a metal ornament, a bunch of rich flowers, a feather, or a quill, is all that is used on the most exclusive pattern hat.

It is impossible to describe the many unusual, unexpected, unthought-of twists, turns and angles of the various shapes. But to say the least they are wonderfully becoming and artistic.

They come in all those beautiful rich shades of Browns, Fawns, Sands, Buffs, Greens and Reds, while Black and Navy are solid as in other years.

Prices this season are surprisingly moderate.
